

Getting the booking off your phone.

A working website where parents browse your six tutors, pick a time, and book it themselves — plus a simple way for you to see what parents are looking for and where they give up.

WHAT YOU TOLD US

The problem isn't the website. It's the back-and-forth.

"Right now it all goes through my phone and it's getting to be a lot."

"I ask what subject and grade they need, check my Google Sheet, suggest a tutor and times, then go back and forth until we settle on something."

"I'd really like to know which subjects people are looking for, and whether they're booking or just looking around and leaving."

WHAT WE BUILT

Four steps, and you're not in any of them.

1

Browse

All six tutors on one page. Subject, grades, rate and experience — the same things you tell parents on the phone.

2

Choose a time

Only times that tutor actually has free. Booked times don't show.

3

Confirm

Name, email, student's first name, grade and subject. Confirmed on the spot.

4

You're emailed

Every booking sends you an email with the details. The time comes off the calendar straight away.

Clean, friendly, and yours

Light and warm rather than dark and corporate, as you asked. Parents can filter to just math, science or reading.

Plans change

A parent can cancel a booking themselves, and that time goes straight back on the calendar for someone else.

WHAT YOU'LL BE ABLE TO SEE

The two questions you asked — answered every week.

200

parents visited

47

started a booking

31

finished it

27

wanted a subject you don't offer

Where people get stuck

Two out of three who start a booking finish it. The ones who don't are dropping out at the form — and more so on a phone than a computer. That's a fixable thing, and now you can see it.

What subjects parents want

Including the ones you don't teach yet. In this sample, geometry and test prep came up most often. That's your hiring list, written by your customers.

To be clear: these numbers come from simulated traffic we generated to show you the reporting working. Your real numbers start the day the site goes live.

WHAT'S NEXT

What this first version doesn't do yet.

You mentioned that keeping schedule changes straight is the messy part. We've made a start, but here's what's honestly still on your plate.

Rescheduling

A parent can cancel, but not move a session to a different time. That's the next thing we'd build.

Telling the tutor

You'll be emailed on every booking. Automatically passing it to the tutor comes next.

Your Google Sheet

The site doesn't replace it yet. We'd want to watch a few real weeks before touching how your schedule is stored.

Watching a real visit

PostHog can replay an actual parent's session, so you can see exactly where someone got stuck rather than guessing.